MARY'S CENTER, A RENOWNED DC COMMUNITY ORGANIZATION SERVING THE IMMIGRANT POPULATION ADDRESSES CONCERNS OF HYATT HOTEL WORKERS

Group joins growing list of supporters urging Hyatt to improve working conditions for housekeeping staff

WASHINGTON, D.C.--In response to the work concerns at Hyatt Hotels, Mary's Center pledged not to hold its 25th Anniversary Gala at the Grand Hyatt hotel in Washington, DC. Mary's Center was scheduled to hold its signature fundraising event at the Grand Hyatt in Washington, DC on October 18, 2013. The event will now take place at the Washington Marriot Wardman Park hotel on the same date.

Mary's Center determined that it would be a direct conflict to hold its most high profile fundraising event at a company under boycott. This is especially problematic given that the Gala's primary purpose is to raise funds to provide health care services to a patient population that overlaps significantly with the worker population at Hyatt hotels.

Mary's Center also noted the negative financial impact that would result if its primary fundraiser took place at a company under a boycott. Many of its invitees and sponsors have already indicated that they will not give funds or participate in an event that takes place at a company under boycott. In addition, there remains a possibility that a labor action could take place at the venue during the event, such as the actions taken by workers during the 2013 Presidential Inauguration in DC. That weekend, Hyatt workers and their supporters distributed over ten thousand flyers in front of several Hyatt hotels in District of Columbia that, like the Grand Hyatt, do not have a contract with workers. The fliers informed people about the boycott, and encouraged them to honor it. Were a similar labor action to occur during Mary's Center fundraiser many, of its guests might refuse to enter the hotel, with disastrous financial results for the organization's bottom line.

"Mary's Center serves many of the "invisible" workers who keep the business of the District and our nation running smoothly, especially workers in the hospitality industry," said Dr. Julie Martinez Ortega, Chair of the Mary's Center Board of Directors and a dental patient of the Center. "By moving the gala, Mary's Center sends a clear message that we care for workers when they are ill and will also support them when they are securing safe working conditions, for themselves and their family. We look forward to patronizing Hyatt once it has worked out the dispute with its employees."

"We salute Mary's Center for taking a stand on this important human rights issue affecting the Latino community," stated Janet Murguía, President and CEO of the National Council of La Raza (NCLR). "This strong statement by Mary's Center, a leading Hispanic-serving nonprofit organization and an NCLR Affiliate, should make Hyatt reconsider its refusal to cease its pattern of abuse and instead take this opportunity to become an industry leader by respecting workers' health and safety."

Over 5,000 individuals and organizations, including NCLR, the NFL Players Association, the National Organization of Women (NOW), Feminist Majority, the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force, Netroots Nation, Interfaith Worker Justice, and the Funders for LGBTQ Issues have joined the boycott.
