Mary's Center Named One of The Washington Post's 2019 Top Workplaces in Greater Washington

Washington, DC –The Washington Post has just announced that Mary's Center has made their list of 2019 Top Workplaces in the greater Washington DC area. This is the second time in 3 years that Mary's Center has received this recognition, which spotlights private, public, nonprofit, and government agencies that received the highest employee ratings from a survey contracted by the newspaper.

"This is great news for Mary's Center and it makes me feel so proud to be part of an organization that is not only doing tremendous work for the most under-resourced people in our communities, but also creates a wonderful and welcoming home for its employees," said Stuart Butler, Chair of the Board of Directors. "It really shows that Mary's Center puts care at the core of everything we do."

Mary's Center started 31 years ago as a small clinic in a basement with 10 employees serving 200 women fleeing war and poverty and has become a vibrant organization with more than 650 employees who are dedicated to promoting wellness among its 53,000 participants.

"At Mary's Center, we are constantly asking ourselves how we can increase our ability to serve our community while remaining a strong organization," said Maria Gomez, Founder, President, and CEO of Mary's Center. "The fact that we have added more than 150 employees and 20,000 participants since we received this award three years ago is a huge marker of our success and an indication that we will continue to thrive as our organization further grows and improves."
